

magnetic flux density, B

Also contains definition of: magnetic induction

Magnetic induction is a vector characterizing a magnetic field. The force acting on a moving charge in a magnetic field is the charge multiplied by the vector product of the velocity and magnetic flux density. This quantity is sometimes loosely called the magnetic field.

See also: flux

Source:

Green Book, 2nd ed., p. 14